Marshall Jones
Joe Pimentel

I wish I knew each of you by name and could address you individually. Since that's not possible I just want to say "Thanks so much to group of you who responded so calmly and with such caring during my time of need (Sunday night--3/09/14). Your kindness and consideration will long be remembered."

God blessed you with a gentle smile
it warms the heart to see,
He blessed you with the tender hands
that comfort easily,
And He blessed you with a gift
that's just as precious as it's rare--
A gift for being kind,
for helping out...for taking care.

Sincere Appreciation,

I didn't get the girl's names, but one of your teams responded to a bicycle wreck on Saturday around noon on Armstrong Valley Road - they were the most professional, compassionate EMT's I've ever been around. If you know who they are, please let them know how much we appreciate their expertise, compassion, humor, and quick response time.

Our friend who was injured didn't think he needed to go to the hospital - but after he asked us what day it was three or four times, we realized he had a head injury - they gently encouraged him to get into the ambulance after we ensured him we would take good care of his bicycle.

Ended up, he had a concussion, separated shoulder, 4 broken ribs, road rash, and a pretty nasty hematoma on his abdomen. He's home and resting, but pretty banged up.

Thank you!

State recognizes MTSU for supporting EMT continuing ed course
Online training videos help EMTs reach 'advanced' certification

MURFREESBORO — Middle Tennessee State University has been recognized by the state of Tennessee's Emergency Medical Services Board for its efforts to help train emergency medical personnel on new statewide licensure standards.

Randy White, instructor coordinator of the EMS program at MTSU, worked with MTSU's University College to create online instructional videos to help emergency medical technicians currently classified as EMT-IV to make the transition to Advanced Emergency Medical Technician, or AEMT, status.

The state EMS Board, which oversees EMS standards across the state, presented MTSU and White with a proclamation recognizing the effort to help Tennessee's EMTs comply with national standards.

Achieving "advanced" EMT status requires a technician to complete an eight-hour course divided into four hours of online work and four hours of practical lab and evaluation. The latter is where White's videos, practice scenarios and compliance checklist come into play.

David Foster, marketing director of MTSU's University College, filmed White demonstrating the proper skills in giving patients naloxone, a narcotic reversal drug, as well as nitrous oxide.

White also is shown in a video using the proper techniques for pediatric intraosseous infusion, an injection method used when traditional IV techniques are not possible.

"EMTs take the test and get a certificate for the online skills," White said, "then they present it to an instructor coordinator for the state, who will review and then assess their practical lab skills."

“That’s the good part about the video. (EMTs) can go in and view what the skill looks like. Then they can practice the correct technique on their own. We made the videos so that they will know what to do and how to do it.”

White, who helped craft the transition curriculum for the state, said the eight-hour course is not mandatory, but those who don’t complete it cannot use the skills in the field and would receive a lower classification of EMT.

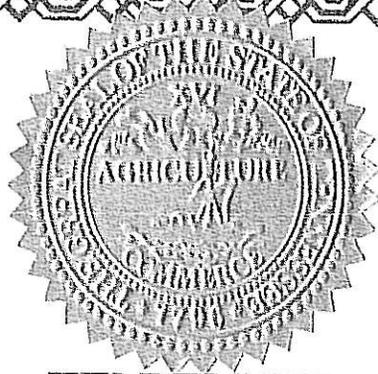

“The use of videos in continuing education training is extremely cost-effective in dollars and time while it allows the user to view it multiple times as they perfect their skills,” Foster said. “Randy is an excellent instructor, and this medium allows him to extend his reach far beyond the local area.”

The videos can be seen at www.youtube.com/mtsuanytime.

To sign up for the AEMT transition course, visit <http://health.state.tn.us/ems/> and click on the “AEMT Transition” link at the top. For more information on the course, call 615-741-2213.

The EMS Board is part of the Tennessee Department of Health’s EMS Division, which oversees a statewide EMS system comprising thousands of paramedics and EMTs, who work for 210 ambulance services that operate 1,300 ambulances across Tennessee. More than a million patients are transported each year, according to the Tennessee Department of Health.
